Love TIPS on how to survive in love

Once you've lost your heart to someone special there is always the chance of having it broken!
Almost all who have enjoyed the trill of young love have also discovered what heartache is.

@ Always be honest with each
@ Celebrate little anniversaries - 3, 6 months ect
@ Don't always analyse your relationship. This can create problems that weren't there before.
@ Be upfront and direct when something really bothers you so you can nip the annoyance in the bud.
@ Learn to compromise especially if something is very important to your partner.
@ Compliment each other sincerely.
@ Be private. Don't blab about anything that happen between you.
@ Spend time alone. It's important to get on with each other's mates, but couples also need quality time together.
@ Don't ever act jealous or possessive. A little makes your partner feel wanted, but too much is major turnoff.
@ Laugh together.
@ Take a break from each other. To make time together can destroy a new relationship.
@ Always show affection. Nothing says "I love you more than an unexpected hug or kiss.

7 Warning Signs Your Child is Struggling in School

When a child or teen begins to struggle with their school work, it is best to get them help they need as soon as possible.
The longer it takes for a student to get help the more lost they become since the school learning continues forward.
Can you tell if your child is struggling?

Children and teens are not always forthcoming about their school performance, especially if they do not feel good about it. Below are signalling an overall problem if any of these become a pattern or start to become at regular, the earlier you find out what is behind the change so you can help them better.

1. Your child suddenly refuses to discuss school.

When your child all of the sudden doesn't want to tell you about what they are learning in school, or how their school day went, it can be a signal that something is not right at school. This could also be limited to the subjects they are struggling with.

2. Your child has a sudden major change in attitude about school.

If your child suddenly become distant or angry towards school, you can bet they do not like how things are going at school. Another big attitude shift to watch for is boredom.
Often kids will complain they are bored when they don't understand what is going on at school. When your child says they are bored, it is important to look a little deeper to find the cause.

3. Your child spends an excessive amount of time on homework.

It is a big warning sign if your child is falling into a pattern to having little to no free time outside of school because they are spending their time on homework. A rough guideline is that a child should be spending ten minutes per grade level on homework each school night.

It is important to know that some teachers give out more home work and some give out far less.

4. They begin misbehaving at school.

Sometimes misbehaviour is really your child's way of trying to take attention off the fact they are struggling with their work. Children and teens also often lack many of the skills necessary to speak up and specifically say what they are having trouble with in school.
Thy are children, after all, and are learning those important social skills throughout te growing up process.

5. Your child's teacher expresses concern.

Sometimes it is easy to dismiss what a teacher is telling you about your child, especially if what the teacher is telling you is different that what you have always known your child to be.

6. Your child begins having trouble sleeping or eating.

Problems sleeping or eating often result from worry. Your child may be having problems sleeping or eating if they know they aren't keeping up with the class on their school work. Young children want to please the caring adults in their lives and may worry that if they aren't doing well in school that these adults will be upset with them.

7. Your child receive low grades

This sign is an obvious one, yet sometimes children and school parents do not want to believe that it is a sign that the child is struggling with school material in school.

Please contact me should you think your child have any of these sign's.
